Dr. Ricardo Ainslie is a practicing psychoanalyst who also conducts psychoanalytic ethnography as part of his academic research. He has worked in communities ravaged by hate crimes, ethnic conflict, and profound social transformation, as well as communities in Mexico visited by drug violence and other crime.

The hallmark of his approach is deep, extended engagements with people in these communities as he explores the individual and collective impact of distressing and sometimes traumatic events through a psychoanalytic lens.

Ethical Challenges in Conducting
Psychoanalytic Work in Communities

3 CEUs in Ethics approved for Psychologists, Social Workers, LPCs, LMFTs, and LADCs

Description of Course Content

In this OSPS seminar, practicing psychoanalyst Dr. Ainslie will use vignettes from his work to highlight ethical questions and challenges that he has encountered while working outside of his consulting room.

Audience members will learn about concepts for and parallels between work outside of the consulting room.

Learning Goals and Objectives

Participants will be able to:

1. Learn the applicability of psychoanalytic therapeutic concepts for work outside of the consulting room.
2. Learn about the parallels between ethical challenges in the clinical setting and working in communities.
3. Learn about psychoanalytic work in communities experiencing racial/ethnic strife and other forms of violence.
